

Downing Strategic Micro-Cap Investment Trust

October 2020 Commentary

The company's NAV increased by 2.04% in the month and the discount also narrowed from -28.74% to -16.05%, which is a pleasing result on both counts. We continue to focus on narrowing the discount through a concentrated marketing effort combined with modest buy backs.

Volex continues to perform very strongly, with the price increasing by 28.88% in the month on the back of a positive trading update and significant earnings upgrades of 39% and 25% this year and next year, respectively. We continue to see significant upside potential from the strong mix, including a recovery in healthcare, acquisition potential, and longer-term structural growth in electric vehicles and data centres. We look forward to the interim results which are due to be published later this month.

Underperformance came from Synectics which declined by 11.11% on no news, but likely some overhang from the prior months disappointing trading update. As we explained in the interim results, Synectics' end markets, predominantly gaming, have been heavily affected by coronavirus restrictions. The company is making headway in other sectors and focusing inwardly during this period of lower demand which we think is the correct course of action.

We have made progress in acquiring and scaling new toehold positions which we will comment on in next month's factsheet.

Risk warning: Your capital is at risk. Investments and the income derived from them can fall as well as rise and investors may not get back the full amount invested. Investments in smaller companies will normally involve greater risk or volatility than investments in larger, more established companies. Performance figures are taken from daily valuations provided by Downing LLP. Return is the total return (value of the investments plus cash including income after all expenses and charges), ignoring investor's taxation. Because shares in an investment Trust are listed on the London Stock Exchange their price is affected by supply and demand. This means that the share price may be different from the NAV. The Company's investment strategy may involve the use of leverage, which exposes the Company to risks associated with borrowings. Please note that past performance is not a guide to future performance.
