the FREEDOM OF MORE CHOICE

More time at home means more time to dream up ways to improve our homes. Don't be surprised if this summer your residential clients ask you for ways to upgrade their space!

We've finally made the leap from smartphones to smart homes; everything is now connected and can be controlled by voice, app, remote or automated scheduling, from lighting, thermostats, and security systems to appliances, speakers, TVs and more. In this golden age of digital development and technological luxury, many people are eager to see what innovations and opportunities await us in home automation in the next decade.

In fact, as reported by Newswire.ca, a 2019 study by Rakuten Canada said that 27% of Canadians already owned smart home technology, and 78% intend to purchase even more within the next year. Among respondents, smart assistants (55%) topped their list, followed by smart appliances (38%), lighting control systems (37%), and security systems and cameras (36%). In addition to easing daily tasks and making life healthier and safer, some of the biggest benefits connected home technology offers residents include:

Create your perfect space

- 1 SAVINGS
- 2 SECURITY
- 3 CONVENIENCE
- 4 CONTROL

- 1. Savings: Thermostats, lighting, plugs and switches with smart technology are helping easily monitor power consumption to lower energy bills and some devices even provide rebates.
- 2. Security: To make their homes safer and more secure, consumers are investing in automated lighting, motion sensors and remote monitoring security cameras.
- 3. Convenience: With a wide range of smart gadgets now working together, users can set different triggers for various devices to automate routine tasks around the home, such as setting their lighting to turn on whenever they unlock the front door.
- 4. Control: Adding peace of mind, smart home devices let users keep an eye on their homes remotely, including monitoring children and pets, among other functions.

There's no denying Canadians have fallen in love with their connected devices. The growing interest in connected home technologies has companies racing to become leaders in this market and meet our digital wants, needs, and expectations. As the systems become more complex, so too will the installations. A well-trained electrician can take full advantage of the new technologies that have the potential to revolutionize not only the home market, but all sectors as well; everybody will soon be looking for skilled electrical experts educated in smart technologies to help them transition to fully connected homes and businesses.

Panasonic

QUIET, YET POWERFUL

An energy-efficient and quiet ceiling fan, Panasonic is known for its time-tested and customer-approved WhisperCeiling. Featuring a totally enclosed condenser AC motor and double-tapered blower wheel, it quietly moves air—even at twice the static pressure as the industry standard.

Rated for continuous use, Panasonic fans exceed performance measurement for ASHRAE 62.2, ENERGY STAR® 3.0, and LEED for Homes. Using less energy to move larger volumes of air than other brands and equipped with a thermal-cutoff fuse, the WhisperCeiling runs cooler so it lasts longer and is less likely to overheat and experience motor failure.
